Achieve your vision.

A leadership strategy that addresses the uncertainty and complexities of change is needed for credit unions to thrive in a fast-paced world. Collective leadership aligns well with credit union values as an effective organizational approach to leadership.

1

NETWORKS: Forming strategies for growth and enhancing member service requires a variety of expertise from across departments or outside partners. Collective leadership encourages intercommunication between contributors.

2

MUTUAL ACCOUNTABILITY: Use group communication to foster strong cohesion and help individuals within teams stay on track with their assigned responsibilities.

3

AUTHENTICITY: Relationship building that encourages open communication and employees to be themselves creates strong, confident teams. Create opportunities to connect as a team and be sure to invite everyone's input.

4

EMPOWERMENT: Swift, effective responses require independent action. Align tasks to employee strengths, ensure applicable training/resources are available, and clearly designate when employees are expected to act on their own.

5

LEARNING: Internal training, industry conferences, continuing education, and mentorship can help all employees perform better and discover opportunities for innovation as well as personal and group advancement.

6

EXPERIMENTATION: Introduce new ideas and test them. Review results regularly as a team to determine what new tactics may be needed.

7

MEMBERS/COMMUNITY FIRST: Make community and member needs the basis for forming organizational and group goals. This helps ensure credit union services remain relevant as community and member needs change.
